Los Angeles County Community Disaster Resilience Project (LACCDR)
Resilience Pilot Coalition Year 3 Workplan

For the third and final pilot year of LACCDR, we are including some guiding questions to help your coalition build more community resilience strategies into your workplan. They are meant to help you think about what resources, outreach and partnerships will be needed in the future. As you answer each set of questions, consider how in Year 3 you can build upon your current activities. You are not expected to address all needs, but it is important to plan and focus your work. Plans may change, and the answers you document here can serve as a foundation for future activities.

Goal Statement
The goal statement is a sentence or two that describes the overall objective of what your coalition plans to do. (For example: The goal of the city’s CR Coalition is to improve its ability to prepare for and respond to emergencies and disasters and to be able to develop strategies for long-term recovery.) Your goal statement might change over time as you include more participants or decide to refocus your efforts on new activities or different issues.

Remember that the goal statement should be something you can realistically achieve within one year and be shared by other members of your community.

Coalition Sustainability
When Year 3 funding concludes, consider how you might continue with coalition meetings and activities. You are encouraged to start thinking about working with and gaining support from partner organizations or merging with already existing groups to continue building resilience in your community.

Will your coalition consider working together after Year 3? (Please indicate): YES NO

If yes, please describe at least 3 different sources of support or partnership your coalition might seek out. For example, resources for future activities (materials, meeting space, volunteer time, etc.). If appropriate, use an activity template (see next section) to more fully describe your sustainability activities/strategy.

Potential Sources of Support:

Priority Vulnerable Community Members

For this project, vulnerability can be defined as the reduced capacity of an individual or group to prepare for, cope with, resist and recover from the impact of a disaster or emergency. A big part of community resilience is the importance of including and planning for the needs of vulnerable people and groups.

- List your most vulnerable community members.

- What are the limitations that they face in either mobility, communications, or resources that make them particularly vulnerable in a disaster?

- How (using mapping tools or other processes) are you identifying who and where they are located?

- How are you including them and their needs in your planning process?

- What are the assets, resources, and networks that vulnerable community members already have and how are you using them? These can include churches, social clubs, neighborhood or community associations.

What can make community members more vulnerable?

- Inability to move around easily (e.g., disability, no car, no transportation);
- Inability to communicate (e.g., language barriers, factors that prevent you from perceiving information about the world around you such as hearing, vision, sensory, no telephone service);
- Inability to care for yourself (e.g., no insurance, living in poverty, long-term illness; cognitive disability);
- Unable to access resources (housing; low social capital at the community level).
Understanding Your Community
Mapping tools and processes can help identify and prioritize the hazards in your area as well as resources, and assets in your community.

- What mapping tool or other process are you using to identify the hazards and resources in your community?

__________________________________________________________________________________

- How are you using the information you collect to get your neighbors and your community prepared, ready to respond, and able to recover from a disaster or emergency?

__________________________________________________________________________________

- How are you encouraging neighbor-to-neighbor discussion or planning to support one another in a disaster emergency?

Important Sectors in Your Community
Resilience is all about moving your community from “me” to “we”. To build community resilience, it is necessary to develop community partnerships and build on community preparedness networks and social connections. For each of your listed strategies/activities in the activity template (next section), you will be asked to indicate how different sectors are included and contributing to your work.

Engaging different sectors in your work builds communication between agencies, helps to avoid overlap, and keeps information flowing. This is especially important during times of disaster or emergency. Specifically, how is your coalition coordinating the work of first responders and community members to keep lines of communication open?

Twelve Important Sectors in Your Community
- Business
- Community Leadership
- Cultural and Faith-based Groups/Organizations
- Emergency Management
- Healthcare
- Social Services
- Housing and Sheltering
- Media
- Mental/Behavioral Health
- State Office of Aging/Equivalent
- Education
- Childcare
Recovery

Recovery is the process that helps your community restore its health, property and essential services after a disaster or emergency.

- How are organizations and agencies in your community involved in planning for the recovery process? For example, organizations like schools, clinics, faith-based organizations. If appropriate, use an activity template (see next section) to describe your recovery activities/strategies.

- List three ways your coalition is planning to help families, neighborhoods, and the community recover as a whole?

1. __________________________________________________________________________

2. __________________________________________________________________________

3. __________________________________________________________________________

- How will organizations and agencies in your community continue to help their current clients as well as the wider community? For example, places like clinics, senior centers, food banks and child care?

__________________________________________________________________________

Planning for recovery includes:

- Understanding resources available to recover and rebuild personal and community property (e.g., homes, parks, community centers)
- Understanding strategies to restore community services (e.g., schools, businesses, faith organizations, clinics, and health centers)
- Developing processes for receiving donations and using volunteers for recovery purposes
- Having strategic recovery partners (e.g., government agencies, schools, businesses, faith organizations, clinics, and health centers)
- Having a plan for addressing the immediate and long term psychological and emotional needs of the community and responders

Measuring Your Success

With all the hard work and planning that your coalition is taking on, you will need tools to document that your activities are making a difference. Think of the desired outcomes that you ultimately want the activities to accomplish, and what will indicate whether, and to what degree, you are making progress. For each of your listed strategies/activities in the activity template (next section), you will be asked to think through what sorts of results you expect, how you will collect the information, and if this will inform your next steps.

Evaluation Resources

Sharing Your Work with Your Community

All the activities your coalition has conducted should be shared with the wider community. Sharing your work is an important part of building community resilience so that the whole community can benefit from the work you’ve done and lessons learned. Sharing your work with community informs others about how they can be better prepared, what community resources are available and what hazards they need to be aware of. It is also a critical opportunity to encourage other community partners and sectors to participate. For example, a community forum is one strategy to share the work of the coalition and to invite and engage stakeholders from different sectors into the coalition’s work. A community forum can be anything from a highly publicized community meeting, a panel presentation, or a discussion group with guest experts at a smaller gathering.

Please describe three ways you will share your plan, activities, and successes with the broader community. If appropriate, use an activity template (see next section).

Workplan

The activity template below allows your coalition to identify the problem(s) or issue(s) in your community and then provide detailed information about what you plan to do and the type of change it will create.

Please complete one activity template table for each type of activity you plan to conduct during Year 3 (Fall 2014 – June 30, 2015) of the LACCDR Pilot Project. Copy and paste as many templates as needed to capture the Year 3 activities for the Coalition.
